PRESIDENTS OF COLLEGES DENY SUICIDE WAVE

Heads of Institutions Say That It Is Only Newspaper Talk

NO MOROSE STUDENTS

Interest in Higher Education Has Increased, Say The Instructors

This is the second of two articles on "Modern Youth" as viewed by New England college presidents. In the first article the educators gave the view that the graduate of today is serious minded, hard working and trustworthy, comparing favorably with the graduate of 1917 and 1897. Denial was made that the younger generation of America was "going to the dogs."

BOSTON, June 3.—College presidents of New England today "spiked" the talk of a "student suicide wave."

"There is no such thing except in the press," declared President Clifton D. Gray, Bates College, Lewiston, Me. "Morbidity and moroseness among students are as rare as radium," President Ralph Earle, Worcester Polytechnic Institute, Worcester, Mass., stated.

"The students certainly are not morbid or morose, and I do not believe that the so-called 'suicide wave' is other than an imaginary wave worked up to apply to colleges."

President Frank Palmer, Spaulding, of Northeastern University, Boston, said:

"We note no morbid or morose tendencies among the students at Northeastern, due perhaps to the fact that we keep them so busily employed during the hours of the day, and so carefully guided and influenced during their hours of leisure that the excesses attributed to some student bodies, the use of liquor, gambling and other immoral practices are not in evidence and our men and women seem to live a normal and constructive life."

President Paul Dwight Moody, Middlebury College, Middlebury, Vt., said:

"If analyzed, the supposed suicide wave would be found to be a matter of the various suicides being treated in such a way as to appear to be a 'wave' but it is probably no greater than at any time in past years. I have not found students particularly morose."

That drinking in colleges is rampant via the flask route was denied by President Gray at Bates College.

"Drinking in college, like every other evil, in nine cases out of ten begins before the student arrives," he said.

Are colleges giving the country too many professional men?

"At Bowdoin College," said President Kenneth C. M. Sills, "we find an increasingly large number of our graduates going into business, therefore we do not feel that Bowdoin is turning out too many professional men in proportion to men in other colleges."

HAROLD H. HEATH MARRIES MISS WILKIE

Over 600 Attend Pretty Ceremony Performed at A Phila. Church

A RAINBOW WEDDING

Miss Anna Wilkie, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Wilkie, of Rose avenue and River Road, was married on Wednesday evening, June 1st, at seven thirty o'clock, at the Bethel Presbyterian Church, 19th and York streets, Philadelphia, to Mr. Harold Herbert Heath, son of Mr. and Mrs. Weston Heath, of 18th street and Glenwood avenue, Philadelphia, by Rev. Dr. Clark, pastor of the church, in the presence of about six hundred relatives and friends.

The church was beautifully decorated with palms, ferns and baskets of flowers and the bride was given in marriage by her father, Mr. William Wilkie.

Mrs. Heath was charmingly gowned in a white silk crepe frock, edged with lace. She wore a handsome lace veil held in place with a coronet of orange blossoms and rhinestones and a train of silk crepe edged with lace and trimmed with a handsome lace ruffle, the train being six yards long. Mrs. Heath also wore white kid slippers and white chiffon silk stockings and carried a shower bouquet of bridal roses and valley lilies.

The matron of honor was Mrs. Thomas Heath, of Eighteenth street and Glenwood avenue, a sister-in-law of the groom. The bridesmaids were the Misses Ethel and Viola Wilkie, of Croydon, Pa., sisters of the bride, and the Misses Clara and Violet Heath, of Philadelphia, nieces of the groom; Little Anna Wilkie, of Croydon, niece of the bride, and Dorothy Smith, of Philadelphia, a cousin, were flower girls.

William Wilkie, Jr., a brother of the bride, who is a member of the United States Navy on the U. S. S. Eagle, No. 35, who has just returned from Haiti, and is enjoying a furlough at his parents' home, was best man.

The ushers were: Messrs. George Hattonfield and Harry Wilkie, of Croydon, Pa., and Thomas Heath and John Duffy, of Philadelphia.

The matron of honor and bridesmaids formed the colors of the rainbow with their costumes. Mrs. Heath wore a handsome frock of orchid colored silk crepe, a picture hat of cream colored leghorn straw, trimmed with a large rose at the side, as well as a streamer which hung down her shoulder and carried a shower bouquet of tea roses and valley lilies.

Miss Ethel Wilkie was gowned in an exquisite frock of green colored silk crepe. She also wore a picture hat of tulle trimmed with flower and streamer to match her costume, and white footgear.

Miss Viola Wilkie's and the Misses Heath's costumes corresponded with that of Miss Ethel Wilkie, in everything but the color. Miss Violet Wilkie was garbed in pink. Miss Clara Heath in honeydew and Miss Violet Heath in a delicate blue. They all carried shower bouquets of pink and white roses and sweet peas.

The little flower girls were very sweetly dressed in white satin dresses and carried large baskets of roses, daisies and sweet peas.

Following the ceremony, a reception took place at the home of the groom's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Weston Heath. A supper was served to about two hundred and fifty guests from Philadelphia, Bristol, Croydon, Lansdale, Wilmington, Trenton, Atlantic City, Newark, Paulsboro and Glassboro. Both the home of the groom's parents and of his brother, adjoining houses, were used for the supper.

A large wedding cake on which stood a bride and groom, and back of them a huge pink heart bearing the word "Love," was greatly enjoyed.

Mr. and Mrs. Heath are spending their honeymoon in Atlantic City and Wildwood, N. J., and upon their return they will reside with the groom's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Weston Heath, Eighteenth and Glenwood avenues, Philadelphia.

Mr. Harold Heath is employed by the Western Electric Company at B and Allegheny avenue, in the capacity of electrician.

Mr. and Mrs. Heath have been the recipients of many valuable and handsome gifts, among which was a diamond studded cameo.

—Mrs. Theodore Hippe, of 261 Jackson street, was a guest over the holidays of relatives in Maryland.

A TRUE FISH TALE

Following is one of a series of articles being written in the interest of the Bristol Fish & Game Protective Association.

By Ralph Radcliffe, Secretary
Bristol Fish and Game Protective Association

"Ever try night fishing for brown trout?" shouted Dan as he brought his car to a quick stop across the street.

"No, I never did, Dan—never even thought of such a thing, and how can fish see to bite at night," I replied while I walked across the street to where he had stopped.

"Well, the big ones bite like blazes at night and I'm going to try them out tonight and I'd like to have you come along," continued Dan. It took us only about five more minutes to complete arrangements for the trip.

I had never before heard of trout biting during the night and probably never would have believed it had not the information come from Dan, for he was a real fisherman. Yes, sir, Dan "knew his onions" when it came to fishing, especially fly fishing. He was the sort of a fellow whose company all fishermen enjoy. As to his ability as a fisherman, he could catch fish where they weren't. Yes, sir, by gosh, I believe Dan could catch fish in a rain barrel. In half an hour we were on our way to Deacon Bush's farm located on the Broadhead Creek, in Monroe County. We were just full of that anticipation which is half of any fishing trip. We swapped fishing stories and talked of how we would play that big fish when he connected with the fly. We were traveling up the Delaware Valley and we appreciated nature's beauty. We enjoyed watching the river wind thru the hills; we enjoyed seeing the birds wing their way thru the air and we appreciated the beauty of the trees as they stood as huge sentinels guarding the river. Ah, on such a trip a pessimist could not exist. He would be carried off by the arms of optimism which were outstretched in every direction. No wonder the four hour trip to Deacon's farm seemed but an hour!

We arrived at Deacon's at 7:30 p. m., exchanged greetings, ate our supper, put on our waders, hopped into the car, and were off for Stite's Bridge, some few miles down the stream, to commence our fishing. We were both anxious to get into the stream.

When we arrived at Stite's Bridge, Dan assigned me to the long pool below. "There is a smooth ledge of rock covered by not more than two feet of water which extends down the middle of the stream for about fifty yards," said Dan. "On one side the water runs from two to four feet deep, while on the other side there is a sudden drop of 6 to 10 feet all along the ledge," continued Dan. "Fish both sides of the ledge, but be sure to cast a short line or you will be hooking all the trees along the creek on your back cast. Now put on a No. 4 Western Bee and do your stuff. I'll see you later." These were the parting words of Dan as he jumped into his car and started down the road to fish another pool in the stream.

I waded into the pool as the dusk began to fade into the night. I cast the fly and dragged it slowly across the water for half an hour with no results. I had hooked a half dozen trees and numerous 10 ton rocks. I was fishing in a perfunctory manner—just casting out the fly and dragging it across the water, not even expecting to hook a fish. The weird night noises seemed to get on my nerves. I was already tired of night fishing.

Was Dan kidding me when he told me that trout could see at night? At first I was inclined to believe he was. But Dan was a real fisherman and I could not believe he brought me all these miles just to make me the victim of a joke. I began to ask myself questions. Am I really fishing or just throwing out the line? Am I putting my mind on my fishing? No, I am not. Did anybody ever succeed in anything great or small without putting his heart into the task? No, he did not. "Well, then, snap into it and fish as if you meant it," I told myself. After that I was a fisherman and began to fish anew. I expected to catch fish and put my mind into my fishing.

After about ten minutes of fishing had elapsed I felt a gentle squeeze on my line. I knew from what Dan had told me that it was a trout. I gave the rod a quick snap with my wrist to set the hook. There was a splashing of water and then all was quiet. I tightened the line and could feel the fish fighting in the bottom of the pool. In a few minutes I had him in my creel and as he just fit comfortably in the bottom, I knew I had a 15 inch trout. I began to like night fishing better and fished harder. After another hour had elapsed I had four nice fish.

Then commenced the oddest experience I ever had in my fishing career. I made a cast and lifted the fly back through the air ready for the next cast when something grabbed it. It pulled and tugged, slackened the line, and pulled and tugged some more. And it was in the air! Holy mackerel! are there flying fish in this stream, thought I. I never before hooked a flying fish in a trout stream. If I had been fishing in the ocean it would not seem so queer. Still it went on tugging and pulling, slackening my line, and pulling and tugging, then it ceased. I drew in the slack from my line and pulling and tugging to the branch of a tree. My flying fish had evidently shaken the hook from its mouth. The next instant I heard a loud splash in the water just below me. Wow! What a trout that must have been. If I could only get my line free from this confounded tree so that I might try for that fish! But my line was still fast and I could feel the branch of the tree sway as I tried to free the line. I was getting desperate for I wanted this big fish. I gave a hard tug on the line and luckily it became free without breaking. I began reeling in my slack line so that I could get proper length to make a cast for the big fish. To my amazement as I reeled in, I felt a heavy tug on my line and the reel began to sing. Most all my line ran out and my rod was bent like the bow of an archer shooting at long range. Oh, what a battle! For fully half an hour this tugging and battling went on in the bottom of the pool. Then it suddenly ceased. I reeled in slowly and it felt as if I was hauling in a log. I reeled in all my line and flashed on my light as I grabbed him by the Sacred Cod! It was a big trout and he was stone dead. I grabbed him by the gills, cut my leader near his mouth and he was still somewhat bewildered. My senses began to come back and I could catch a dead fish make all the commotion this one did, and how could I catch a fish at all when my line was fast to a tree. I began to think I was "cuckoo"; even more "cuckoo" than the average fisherman.

Then along came Dan in his machine and a basketful of trout. Dan had 14 fine brown trout. I told him of my experience and he told me that trout often fight so hard that the over-exertion weakens their hearts and they die.

"Let's hop in the machine and go to Deacon's and get some sleep. We'll clean the fish in the morning," said Dan.

"Right-o," said I, and in an hour we were in slumberland. The next morning we put the big fish on the scales. "A 4 pound 1 ounce brown trout! Wow! What a fish!" exclaimed Dan. "What do you think we found in him. A bat! Not a baseball bat, but one of those things that looks half like an animal and half like a bird. I almost fainted. The mystery was now solved. The bat had seen my fly and had taken it on the back cast. It had flown frantically about and fastened my line in some overhanging branches. In its mad flight it had gotten too close to the water and the big trout nailed it. I never expect to see another experience to match this one as long as I fish.

"But who would have thought that a trout would swallow a bat?" I asked of Dan.

"A big brown trout will try to swallow a bat if you drag it over the water at night time," replied Dan.

MUCH MATERIAL USED IN SPAN OF NEW BRIDGE

Seventy Men Worked From Yesterday Until 1 A. M. Today

FLEET OF TRUCKS USED

The arch-span of the new concrete bridge across the canal at Beaver street, was poured yesterday. A gang of 70 men started work yesterday morning pouring the concrete into the elaborate forms built by a gang of carpenters who have been working for many days on the job. The pouring was finished at one o'clock this morning, the men working continuously.

The span is 60 feet long and 40 feet wide and three concrete mixing machines and a fleet of trucks hauling sand, gravel and cement were kept moving rapidly.

There were 1400 bags of cement, 122 tons of sand and 264 tons of gravel used in the arch. These ingredients when mixed made 235 cubic yards of concrete.

Exchange Club Members Hear Interesting Talk

The members of the Bristol Exchange Club enjoyed another educational feast last evening, when they listened to a most interesting and semi-humorous address by Prof. Ivor Griffith, professor of pharmacy at the Philadelphia School of Pharmacy and Science. Prof. Griffith is also chief chemist for the Stetson Co., manufacturers of hats.

The speaker brought with him an old book which had been written by William Penn and which described remedies used by the medical profession over 200 years ago. His speech centered around several extracts which he selected from this ancient record.

He referred to the remedies used by people several centuries ago, and showed how the ancient Materia Medica, was built upon the theory that "like produced like." He said it was this theory which actuated Dr. Hahnemann, when he laid the foundation for the Hahnemann Homeopathic Hospital in Philadelphia. The medical profession today, he said, is gradually getting back to the use of animal medicines, that is medicines that are extracted from or made from parts of animals.

It would be impossible to adequately describe the address or the impression it made upon the audience. It was exceedingly interesting, it was instructive, it was educational, entirely free from technical phrases and teeming with humor. The only regret expressed by those present was, that the address was too short.

ENDURING FAME

Winsome Gertrude Ederle swam the English channel and was feted throughout Europe and America as the world's idol. Then came comparative oblivion for her. Less long-lived was the popular appeal in the circumstances surrounding the Catalina swim of George Young. Now the world is electrified over another achievement of youth—the non-stop transatlantic flight of Charles Lindbergh.

Already greater honors have been bestowed upon the intrepid young flier than upon the others and still greater honors await his return home, but the public is fickle. One wonders how long it will be before Lindbergh and his feat will join the host of dimly remembered events of the past.

There are a number of reasons why his fame will be more enduring than is usually the case. It was more spectacular and vastly more daring. And it was more than a sporting event and endurance test, having no little utilitarian value to aviation. Unless outdone by some other venturesome spirit his achievement will not soon be forgotten.

But Charles Lindbergh did something more timely and of far more importance than a mere demonstration of the possibilities in aviation and of human daring. He has introduced a note of concord in an international situation which needed just such a touch to bring back a realization of the friendship that has in the past prevailed and should prevail between the French and the American people. He accomplished more in a few hours than a corps of diplomats could accomplish, or undo, in years.

Perhaps Lindbergh's training and epoch-making flight do not qualify him for the post of chief of the air branch of the United States army, a position to which he was "nominated" by an admirer but he does deserve recognition by his government and his people and will get it.

FAT AND SKINNY

Getting thin or getting fat. How those two bugaboos do hang over the American people! Verily no blue law could cause more discomfort.

Mary adores chocolates, but she'll tell you mournfully that she can't eat them because she's getting too fat.

Dad doesn't really mind his big paunch, but so darned many people say, "You aren't so slim as you used to be, are you Jim?" that in desperation he takes to gym, suffers the tortures of using long, unused muscles, and lives on a slice of toast and water to put the silencer on that "getting fat" speech.

And how the fat ones do envy the thin ones whom the doctor orders to drink lots of milk, eat beefsteak and all the candy they want.

But suppose you are a thin one and hate milk? Still you will suffer the nauseating stuff just so you won't have to hear people say "My goodness, girl, you're nothing but a wraith."

Somehow or other, one can't help thinking that old Gibbon, who wrote "The Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire" is to be envied for his courage. The doctor told him, so the story goes, that he'd die if he kept on getting fatter. He required a specially built chair big enough for two ordinary folk. But he said he'd be darned if he'd give up eating the way he wanted to, and so he died, glorying in his fatness.

College Presidents Deny Suicide Wave

fields of endeavor. In the early years of the college a very large percentage of graduates went into the so-called learned professions. Now an equally large percentage seems to be going into business."

President Speare, of Northeastern, said:

"The interest in higher education in this country has increased tremendously during the last decade, due in some measure, at least, to the fact that during the war educated men forged rapidly to the front and gained positions of prominence and usefulness both in military and civilian affairs. It is worth while to graduate men and women from our colleges, but the most important question is, what becomes of them as a result of the years devoted to education and whether the time and money thus employed are well expended."

"All things being equal, a trained mind is an adept mind and one which can seek the why as well as the how, can get to the bottom of things, reason its way out, plan a method of procedure and solve problems with facility," President Speare continued. "There is a great difference in the method of approach to any problem in the hands of the trained or untrained person. Education, therefore, whether general or specific, broadens the horizon, awakens the powers of analysis and imagination, and greatly augments any native powers which one may possess and makes them more available and effective."

"It is true that there are at the moment more professional men and women being graduated from the colleges, universities and technical schools than ever before, but the pendulum seems to be swinging somewhat the other way. The popularity of the schools of liberal arts is re-awakening and many professional schools are adding to their programmes cultural and liberal courses which counterbalance the vocational and produce well-trained, cultured minds."

—Mr. and Mrs. Lynch and child, of Madison street, visited relatives at Hazelton, Pa., over the week-end and Decoration Day.

Two States Plan To Protect Waters Of Delaware River

of the Delaware across the Hudson to the east bank thereof."

The former executive referred also to the oyster industry in the southern section of the State, re-forestation and similar matters which he said must be considered by the organization.

Former Mayor Moore, of Philadelphia, cited the successes of similar organizations elsewhere. He pointed out that heretofore citizens of New Jersey and Pennsylvania had worked independently, and that all along the valley had interests in the river. He urged for preservation of water supply, studies in re-forestation and navigation. Such an organization he said should be on a big and broad scale to consider all questions.

Congressman Watson said the organization could well organize for the future in the broad interests of the valley's preservation.

Commissioner Swan, another speaker, launched into a vigorous attack of the now dormant Tri-State Water Compact and pointed to the proposed measure as a warning for action against any such move in the next year or so.

Referring particularly to the matter of securing unpolluted water, Commissioner Swan said Philadelphia still has the idea that it must go to the northern Delaware for its supply.

Concluding, he said:

"There is now a movement between Pennsylvania and New Jersey to clean up pollution of all streams, especially the Delaware River. Therefore it is unnecessary for Philadelphia to go to the upper Delaware for unpolluted water. To do that would cost the city of Philadelphia $300,000,000, according to estimates of their own engineers. But to erect more filters necessary to make the Delaware River safe for use would cost less than $50,000,000. Chester is now taking its water from the Delaware River, 17 miles below Philadelphia, where it is getting all of Philadelphia's trade wastes. By filtration and proper chemical treatment this water is made pure, and typhoid fever has been reduced for several years past to a minimum."

Senator Buckman cited needs for co-operative work in many matters pertaining to the valley's welfare. At the conclusion of his message, he read the declaration of principles of the organization, and moved for a permanent body to be formed. This motion was seconded by Senator A. Crozer Reeves.

The purposes of the organization are set forth as follows:

"The object of the Delaware River Valley Association shall be the preservation and development of the Delaware River Valley in all its interests; its waterways, its commercial and navigation, its fisheries, its reforestation, its agriculture and fertility, its waterpower, its resorts, its highways and its historical sites.

"The most important feature, for the general welfare of this section, is the preservation of the normal flow of the Delaware River and its tributaries, but this is entirely consistent with the storage of the flood water of these streams for potable and power purposes to supply the needs of communities; (1) of the Delaware River Valley and (2) of adjacent communities not separated by the main stream of other river basins.

"Membership of this association shall consist of the municipalities within the Delaware River Valley, and associate memberships consisting of individuals resident within the valley, commercial and civic organizations, and municipalities adjacent to the valley as may be admitted."

Mayor Donnelly, Senator Reeves and Mayor Stockham, of Morrisville, were members of the nominating committee.

Among those who attended the meeting were Mayor Thomas S. Moore, of Stockton; W. Egbert Thomas, of the Milford Common Council; Mayor W. R. Saylor, of Milford; J. Gilbert Borton, of the Woodstown Chamber of Commerce; Henry F. Plate, of the New Hope Chamber of Commerce; James H. Brooks, of the Bristol Rotary Club; former Assemblyman Herbert West, H. T. Critchlow, of the

New Jersey State Department of Conservation and Development; New Jersey State Forester C. P. Wilber, Har-

HEALTHY OLD MEN AND WOMEN NEED NEVER HAVE GRAY HAIR

As Long As Color Glands Remain Normal and Active Plenty Of Pigment Will Keep Hair Its Natural Shade

IF HAIR IS FADED AND STREAKED WITH GRAY BEGIN REVIVING COLOR GLANDS

Simple Tonic Starts Youthful Color Returning Again

Everybody knows if their color glands and hair roots are active and normal they will continue indefinitely to have rich, natural colored hair entirely free of gray and off-colored locks.

A doctor several years ago asked himself this question: "Why not rub a stimulating tonic into the scalp that will revive, strengthen and tone up those inactive glands so that nature in her own inimitable way will resume putting plenty of pigment into the hair tubes—surely the hair will then again resume its original, natural, beautiful shades of youth regardless of the user's age or the condition of their hair."

REMARKABLE DISCOVERY
The doctor's search for a tonic that would accomplish this purpose led him into endless experiments, but the final result was worth it. He didn't want a dye or tint and it of course must be harmless and something that could be used for years and years without the slightest injury to hair or scalp. Under the name of Lea's Hair Tonic anyone may now purchase the tonic he finally perfected. For several years now hairdressers and people scattered all over the country have been using it. Results are so natural, gradual and nice that men as well as women use it. It doesn't stain the scalp. One's friends seldom notice the gradual change and to test what it will do one needs only to apply it a week or so to some small spot and watch results. Users have been amazed at the younger appearance that comes with the disappearance of gray hairs from their head. If any reader desires to try a bottle of Lea's Hair Tonic on the maker's absolute guarantee of complete satisfaction they should pin a dollar bill to this advertisement and send it to the Lea's Tonic Company, Brentwood, Md., with their name and address plainly written. A generous sized bottle will be sent prepaid anywhere. Leading druggists have Lea's Hair Tonic, $1.00 per bottle.—(Adv.)
